

Week 19

The computer is finally completed, physically at least, because of this I think that I will be able to return to my writing as my main ingenuity project unless Mr. Ford needs me to set up something on the Oculus Rift for him or do some other computer-related thing. Even during these past few weeks when my writing hasn't been my main focus I have still been continuing on it regardless. The environmental veganism essay is really becoming an amalgamation, every time I think I'm near done, either I, or the people I ask to look over it suggest another thing to mention which I feel obliged to add. Because of this sheer mass of information. I think I may abandon the health argument which I had previously started and was planned for release after this one, simply because I think that there would be a similar overwhelming wealth of information to write down in the shorter format I have been doing. Included is a picture of the CPU heatsink that we used on building the computer, I am just including it because I need a picture and it was very difficult to attach.

